

MIT philosophy: faculty:

Alex Byrne

Alex Byrne did his graduate work at Princeton before arriving at MIT in 1994 via a postdoc at Caltech. His main interests are philosophy of mind (especially perception and consciousness), metaphysics (especially color), and epistemology. He also dabbles in other areas, including philosophy of language, metaethics, and Wittgenstein.

Topics of Alex's recent papers include color blindness, disjunctivism, introspection, metaethics, and the mind-body problem. He has written a number of papers on color with David Hilbert of the University of Illinois at Chicago; they also edited the two-volume collection Readings on Color for MIT Press. Alex recently edited (with Judith Thomson), Content and Modality: Themes from the Philosophy of Robert Stalnaker, and (with Heather Logue) Disjunctivism: Contemporary Readings. He is also working on a book on self-knowledge.

[home page | online papers | complete bibliography \(cv in pdf\)]

office      phone      email      office hours

32-D929 617-258-6106 abyrne@mit.edu      By appt.