

Center for Study of Public Choice

Department of Economics | George Mason University | Public Choice Society | European Public Choice |
Buchanan and the Nobel

Home

What's New?

2008 Annual Report

About

Programs

News

Faculty and Staff

Adjuncts and Visitors

Students

Publications

Contributions

2007 Annual Report ▼

Go

Welcome!

The Center for Study of Public Choice, a unique research institution at George Mason University, provides a single location where eminent scholars conduct innovative research, publish their findings and conclusions in a variety of print and electronic media, and teach the science of public choice. Under the current leadership of Don Boudreaux and James M. Buchanan, emeritus professor and advisory general director, The Center builds on the groundbreaking economic and political science theories for which Buchanan was awarded the Nobel Prize in economics. The Center draws both visiting and resident scholars and students from all over the world. Its faculty and researchers lecture and conduct seminars locally, across the United States, and abroad. For more information see our link to About us.

4400 University Drive, MSN 1D3
Fairfax, VA 22030-4444
Phone: (703) 993-2330
Fax: (703) 993-2323

Visit our Center Blogs:

Marginal Revolution

EconLog

Overcoming Bias

Faculty Webpages

