The Centre for Public Economics was a research group within the Department of Economics and International Development. It was founded over 25 years ago as the Centre for Fiscal Studies, and was renamed in 2002 to better reflect the interests of the staff and to reflect their widening of scope of interest.

The Centre provided a focus for the research activities of department members; including a forum for the dissemination of new ideas, through seminars and discussion papers. The Centre has a network of expertise on which to draw for consultancy and academic research. It runs short courses in its areas of expertise.
