Stephen P. Kaufman has been a Senior Lecturer of Business Administration at the Harvard Business School since 2001. He teaches in both the MBA program and various Executive Education programs. His MBA courses include the first year required course in Technology and Operations Management and the second year elective Building and Sustaining the Successful Enterprise, which was developed by Clay Christensen and focuses on strategy and general management. This has become the most popular elective course in the MBA curriculum with well over half the 2nd year student body enrolling. The Class of 2008 recognized Kaufman with its Faculty Award in Teaching and the administration named him an inaugural recipient of the school's recently established Charles M. Williams Award for Excellence in Teaching.
