We present in this paper a general description about the business services in China. With some reform on liberalization in business services, the structures of service markets have been changed great. Since the technical, capital barriers to the markets of business service are not higher in general, the severe restrictions for entrants to these markets are basically come from government administrative monopoly. The functions of government in the development of service markets are should be mainly in providing legal framework and institutional infrastructures, rather than in directly controlling the most of power to run the business. It is very important in China now to establish an independent, self-disciplined industrial organization to deal with the most affairs such as qualification, standards, and pricing and so on, and to strengthen the competitions in these sectors, to extend the degree of the opening to foreign rivals.
