

EXPLORE

ANTHROPOLOGY AT MIT

Anthropology is the comparative study of human cultures, how customary ideas, actions, and institutions shape individual and collective experience. MIT Anthropology faculty conduct research all over the world, from Colombia to Mongolia, and within the United States. We live and work among the people we study, participating in daily activities and rituals, conducting interviews, and using multimedia tools such as photography and videography to collect data. We analyze how social identities and hierarchies are established or contested, cultural values are transmitted and transformed, and community and state organizations operate. We bring together expertise in such topics as myth and ritual, ethnicity and race, bioethics and health politics, family and gender, games and play, law and human rights, science and technology, energy, food, language, and the environment. Our program provides students with training in field methods and social theory, critical thinking skills, and cross-cultural understanding.

The Anthropology program offers a variety of undergraduate and graduate courses. For details about our undergraduate offerings, including resources for majors, minors, and concentrators, please visit our Undergraduate page. For graduate offerings, please visit our Graduate page.

Learn more about MIT Anthropology—who we are and what we do—through the images above.

MIT Anthropology
77 Massachusetts Avenue, E53-335, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02142
ph: 617.452.2837 fax: 617.253.5363 anthro@mit.edu

Join us on Facebook!

search mit anthropology

HASTS · SHASS