

Contributions in Black Studies

A Journal of African and Afro-American Studies

Article Title

War, Social Transition, and Illness Conception: The Case of Tuberculosis in South Sudan

Authors

Jok M. Jok, University of California, Los Angeles

Abstract

Before the Civil War resumed in South Sudan in 1983, efforts to combat tuberculosis were heading towards success. Today, however, tuberculosis is a serious health problem among the internally displaced and refugee population of South Sudan. (McCarthy et al., 1995). It is estimated that 20,000 Dinka live in displaced persons' camps and around relief centers in Northern Bahr el Ghazal of southwestern Sudan (hereafter Western Dinka).

Recommended Citation

Jok, Jok M. (1997) "War, Social Transition, and Illness Conception: The Case of Tuberculosis in South Sudan," Contributions in Black Studies: Vol. 15 , Article 6.
Available at: <https://scholarworks.umass.edu/cibs/vol15/iss1/6>

Download

DOWNLOADS

Since October 01, 2008

Share

COinS