Journal of Pesticide Safety Education

The Journal of Pesticide Safety Education (JSPE) is the official repository of discipline-specific writings that have been considered, accepted, and published as refereed literature by the American Association of Pesticide Safety Educators (AAPSE). Inclusion of articles in other publications, electronic sources, or systematic large-scale distribution may be done only with prior electronic or written permission of the Editor.

Requests, permissions, or other communications to the Editor can be sent electronically to: editor@jspe.org.

Articles are located by selecting the following in the header menu (above):

- Current (for the latest articles) and,
- Archives (for past volumes).

Video Tutorials:

JPSE uses the Open Journal System (OJS) to manage content and users. Here are several video tutorials for authors and reviewers who must log into the system to manage manuscripts. These videos are generic in nature so some parts my not match the JPSE system entirely, but do serve to orient the user facing the task of using JPSE's OJS format.

- Reviewing an Article in OJS - This video describes the five easy steps to review an article in an OJS journal such as JPSE.

JPSE Author Guidelines follow the American Psychological Association's manual of style. Here are some basics of APA Style for authors and reviewers.

BROWSER RECOMMENDATON: This site works best when viewed with the newest versions of the following browsers: Firefox, Safari, Opera. It will also work with newer versions of Netscape and Internet Explorer 6 or below. Users have experienced some format issues with Internet Explorer 7 because that browser is not compliant with the latest HTML and CSS standards. Microsoft plans to address this problem in Internet Explorer 8. Firefox is generally recommended for most users because it is tends to be more secure and stable than most browsers.
