EUA member universities in Georgia are organising a national seminar where staff and students, assisted by EUA international experts, will examine the impact of the Bologna process and other reforms in higher education. The two-day event aims to provide a forum to exchange experience of key implementation issues, and to identify major challenges for the future.

The seminar will focus on the challenges of curriculum reform and new degree structures, the notion of employability in the Georgian and international labour market, and approaches towards embedding quality culture in Georgian higher education.

The event will also provide input to the Trends V project from an important new Bologna member state. Trends V is assessing progress towards the European Higher Education Area, and will be presented at both the European Convention on Higher Education in Lisbon, in March 2007, as well as a
