Aboriginal communities and resource companies use common lands for often opposing uses and differing values.

Aboriginal communities maintain a residual and ongoing right to use lands ceded by them through treaties, while resource companies also have a right to access and use these same lands for mineral development through legislation. In the next decade how will Aboriginal communities and resource companies move from talking about consultation to evolving forms of consent?

This conference will address ways to meet the challenges facing all of us including the education and training of Aboriginal youth; development of participation agreements; and ways to mutually prosper in the minerals industry.
