The creative and intellectual excellence and ambition of two of the country's leading cultural bodies will come together on March 26 to build, challenge and forge connections between the arts and contemporary society.

Together Opera North and the University of Leeds will be a powerful force uniting research, creativity, education, knowledge transfer and participation. This is a significant step forward in the University's strategy to increase the profile of the University and its international standing.

The collaboration will include a broad spectrum of initiatives including productions, lectures, teaching, placements and educational outreach programmes.

This innovative cultural partnership will significantly broaden learning and teaching activities, research opportunities and staff and student experiences. It will also provide benefits of academic and artistic value to the wider community.

Professor David Cooper, Dean of the Faculty of Performance, Visual Arts and Communications, gave the new project a warm welcome. "We are excited about the partnership with Opera North and look forward to engaging new participants in creativity and academic achievement and to have an impact on the culture of the University. Richard Mantle, General Director of Opera North also added "The bringing together of our two organisations is a landmark moment which will create unique opportunities to explore uncharted territory and inspire artists, audiences, academics and students to play a fundamental role in shaping our cultural future.
