DESCRIPTION

The study provides an assessment of the Philippine rattan sector with a view to identify strategic policies and research agenda for the sustainable development of the sector and upliftment of the socio-economic conditions of rattan-dependent people. The study adopted the production-to-consumption system framework developed by International Network for Bamboo and Rattan (INBAR).

Four major rattan areas, two plantation sites and three major demand areas are covered in the study.

Problems and constraints in the rattan production and marketing systems are analysed and their interrelationship established. The paper also covers socio-economic, financial, technical, research and institutional aspects, and discusses policy issues that cut across these areas.
