Health

Surviving, Learning and Growing through People Who Care

Save the Children supports health programs in nearly 40 countries around the world. Through our global network of country offices and health professionals, we work in partnership with Ministries of Health, local and international non-governmental organizations, and donors to improve the quality, availability, and use of key health practices and services. Our priority program areas include newborn and child health and survival, reproductive health (including family planning, safe motherhood, and adolescent health), HIV/AIDS and school health and nutrition. We are committed to local capacity building and partnerships, program learning and innovation, and community-based approaches that address the health needs of poor and disadvantaged populations.

An Organization You Can Trust

In fiscal year 2008, 92 percent of all expenditures went to program services. That percentage is an average for all of Save the Children's programs worldwide: the percentage spent on any particular program may vary.
