What's New and News?

A Health Research and Policy Agenda for Im/migration Between Mexico and California by L.A. Lubbock, C.D. Brindis, S.B. Macfarlane, et. al. California and Mexico are rich in research expertise and research interest in migrant health. The combined research outputs of academic institutions on both sides of the United States-Mexico border have resulted in a significant body of knowledge about patterns of disease, health seeking behaviors, access to health care, and health outcomes of Mexican migrants living in California. Henry F. C. Weil and Philip R. Lee in Washington Post of December 19th. "The health-care debate in the Senate has, thankfully, returned to the paramount issue of cost. Unfortunately, the most obvious, time-tested and feasible approach to providing high-quality care at reasonable cost remains excluded from consideration." --- Philip R. Lee, a former chancellor of the University of California at San Francisco

In Addressing California's Health Coverage Gaps: The Impact of National Health Care Reform, political scientist Annette Gardner, Berkeley CHEFS Associate Director Melissa Rodgers, and Berkeley Labor Center Chair Ken Jacobs focus on the human face of health care reform: the millions of individuals and families who lack affordable insurance coverage. The report analyzes how well the bills moving forward in Congress will succeed in filling coverage gaps in California and what effects the bills will have on California's safety net system.
